Forming part of Ayckbourn's 'Things that go Bump' trilogy of black comedies, 'Snake in the Grass' follows the return home of Annabel Chester after the death of her father to meet Alice, her father's nurse, and Miriam, her younger sister. It soon becomes clear that her father's death may have been hastened by Miriam and that his ghostly presence still pervades the house and garden. A series of spooky happenings follow, some genuine, some imagined, some possibly invented, until the play reaches its ghostly climax.
