Welcome to Bradgate Drama Society's 2010 Christmas production. This year we have cast aside the shackles of a script (yes I know sometimes we tend to cast aside the shackles of a script even when we've got one) to present an exciting departure into Variety brought to you in what we hope approximates to a night club atmosphere, notwithstanding a disappointing lack of sultry hostesses.

With a fabulous all-star cast -

Gill Bates took a break from the stage to spend more time with her family but the family asked if we'd have her back

Barry Cook our resident raconteur who apparently practices his routines on the cows in the barn – which is why most of them can be found out in the field

Geoff Bourne one of our newer members who's only now realising what he's let himself in for

Anita Gillingham an experienced actress who has graced the stage in many classical roles but has agreed to slum it just this once

Tom Clarke who reputedly made his BDS debut as a child actor when the troops came back from Flanders and is still going - just

Karen Griffiths our answer to Victoria Wood, Gracie Fields, Cheryl Cole and anyone else born North of Markfield

Andi Hastie the Society's chairman showing he still thinks he's got what it takes

Wynn Morris our very own Welshman who played rugby like Aled Jones and sings like Gareth Edwards

John Rolinson one of Leicestershire's biggest luvvies who, despite constant efforts, has yet to make his big breakthrough – perhaps this time?

Robert Willson used to be our romantic lead but can't quite manage the climb to the Juliet balcony these days

All under the notional control of -

John Williams who, putting aside all notion of personal dignity has allied the organisational talents of a sheep with the piano playing talents of Les Dawson to create tonight's feast of entertainment, occasionally assisted by –

Picture withheld for reasons of taste

Peter Upton, the monkey to his organ grinder
